

Social Media Policy

SANE regards social media as having an important part to play in facilitating an exchange of views and experiences in relation to mental health. For the most part, interactions on our social media platforms make a constructive and valued contribution to sharing information and developing/enhancing debate. However, very occasionally, posts [and comments] can be made which we believe could be damaging to others because they are untrue, could cause distress or could deter people who may need help.

We seek to raise awareness and encourage debate through our social media activity. We do not wish in any way to infringe the rights of individuals to engage in a free exchange of views and opinions. But to serve the interests of everyone using our platforms, we reserve the right to delete material in the circumstances described above.

We would also delete material that we deemed discriminatory or hateful.
